

REMARKS

Applicants hereby amend the application to more clearly define terms and concepts used to describe the invention. In particular the title has been changed to its original version to make clearer that the invention is not merely creating an HTML document.

Applicants submit that the changes incorporated in this preliminary amendment do not constitute new matter. By way of example, the additional language being added to page 3 of the specification merely expands on the original discussion of a concept of the invention. This concept is also discussed, inter alia, at page 5, lines 3-8. In particular, the invention relates to the creation of an electronic document that does not require an active server process to be viewed by a user (e.g., the user can merely open a CD file on his home computer). The phrase “static electronic document” is introduced as a shorthand notation for this concept.

Respectfully submitted,
